THE ONE THING that's always annoyed us at the Weekly about Sunday's Rehab blowout at the Hard Rock is the refusal of the staff to let us in wearing our normal weekend morning outfit of flip-flops, toothbrush and nothing else. But now it doesn't matter, because we're able to enjoy the best of Rehab from the privacy of our home with the launch of the new website at www.rehably.com. It's an interactive version of the popular print ad. Click on the tubby guy in the pilot's cap, hear a belch and get the drink menu (along with a frightening, swinging Tim of Jeff Beacher's Madhouse). Click on the cute blonde—no, the other one—and pull up a choice of five songs for your surfing pleasure. Run your hand, er, cursor over the mermaid and access the photo gallery.

Best of all, click on Rehab promoter Jack Lafleur to make his head turn and hear him go, "Hmmm." It links you to a massage/Simon Says game, but we honestly have more fun making jack turn and hum in rhythm to Jazzy Jeff and Will Smith's "Summertime."
